

HAMMER:

A hammer is single candlestick that forms when a security initially trades lower from the opening price but later on the day trades higher to close the day above the opening price. An important requirement is that the body of the candlestick has to be less than 50% of the wick. This is considered a bullish reversal pattern near the bottom of a downtrend or a continuation pattern if met in an uptrend.