

SHOOTING STAR:

A shooting star is single candlestick that forms when a security initially trades higher from the opening price but later on the day trades lower to close the day below the opening price. An important requirement is that the body of the candlestick has to be less than 50% of the wick. This is considered a bearish reversal pattern near the top of an uptrend or a continuation pattern if met in a